

Acknowledgments

The research in this book reflects almost four years of continuous collaborative endeavors made between the authors and civilian administrators, governmental officials, college professors, and institute researchers in China, Taiwan, and the United States. In the period from 2014 to 2018 the Association of Chinese Historians in the United States (CHUS) has organized several scholarly, academic conferences, and on-the-spot social and legal surveys in China and Taiwan. The majority of the authors of this book joined those delegations and had spent time, often during the summertime, to compile data and sources. Some of the chapters in this volume are drawn from several CHUS conferences. In both scope and content, this book is indeed a wealth of splendid scholarly presentations. The heartfelt thanks from the two editors go to each of the authors for their significant contributions to this book that should be welcome by both academics and general readers who intend to explore the corruption issue and anticorruption policy inside the People's Republic of China (PRC) and its recent historical evolution.

Qiang Fang wants to express his gratitude to the generous financial support from a number of grants provided by the University of Minnesota Twin Cities and the University of Minnesota Duluth. These grants include but are not limited to the University-wide Imagine Fund, and special supports from Professor Susan Maher, dean of College of Liberal Arts. In particular, we greatly appreciate the invitation to travel to Taiwan and the valuable anticorruption materials of Ge Yongguang, professor at the National Taiwan University and head of the China Youth National Salvation Corps. In addition, Qiang Fang would like to thank Ms. Jing Duan for her crucial assistance throughout the writing of this book.

Many people at the University of Central Oklahoma (UCO) have contributed to this volume and deserve recognition. First, Xiaobing Li would like to thank President Don Betz; Provost John F. Barthell; dean of the College of Liberal Arts, Catherine S. Webster; and chairperson of the Department of History and Geography, Katrina Lacher. They have been very supportive of the project over the past three years. The UCO faculty merit-credit program sponsored by the Office of Academic Affairs, as well as travel funds from the College of Liberal Arts, provided funding for our research and trips to conferences. The UCO Student Research, Creative, and Scholarly Activities (RCSA) grants sponsored by the Office of High-Impact Practices led by Director Michael Springer, made student research assistants available for the project during the past three years. Brad Watkins prepared the maps Travis Chambers proofread some chapters. Annamaria Martucci provided secretarial assistance. Li's special thanks go to Director Peter D. Hershock, Asian Studies Development Program, East-West Center, and Dr. Shana Brown, Department of History, University of Hawaii, as co-directors of the 2017–2018 Faculty Development Seminar of the USDoE/UISFL. The program offers a prized addition to the existing literature on the most important topics of China Studies.

Finally, the two editors offer thanks to Mr. Brian Hill and Mr. Eric Kuntzman for their excellent professionalism and their always timely support during the editorial progress of this book. Of course, the two editors are grateful to the editors, peer reviewers, copy-editors, and staff at Lexington and Rowman & Littlefield Publishers for their first-class editorial expertise, without which this book could not have been presented to the readers on time.
